February in Review: Raining Dividends

Australian's love their dividends, even more so when Australian companies decide to bump up dividend pay outs by an average of 10% from the same time last year.

The ASX's grossed up yield is now 5.88%, which saw the ASX beating all major peers in February adding over 5% in the shortest month of the year. This has had a positive effect on all portfolio yields.

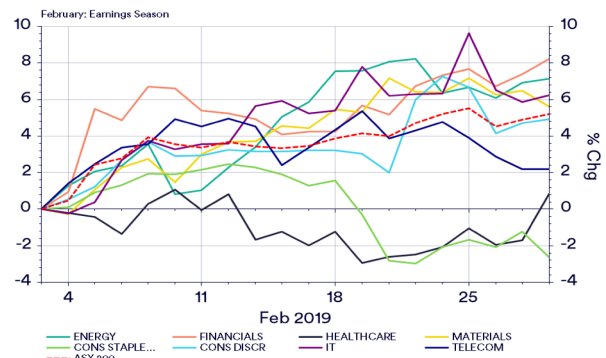

Dividends are an attractive thing – this chart shows the grossed-up yields of the higher dividend yield sectors of the ASX 200. A 9.3% grossed yield from the banks goes a long way to explaining the ASX's outperformance considering the banks make up over 27% of the whole of the ASX 200.

This yield story also explains ASX performance considering it was the 'same' month that saw the final Banking Royal Commission report being handed down and both sides of Government looking to introduce the majority of its recommendations. Financial Services added 8.23% in February beating all others.

Looking to the coming months, the declared dividends from February's reporting season will be returned to shareholders - $86 billion worth to be exact. This should add some support to the market as these funds are reinvested.

The next question however becomes: is this dividend growth sustainable? Looking at the outlook statements and forecasted guidance for ASX listed firms one would suspect not.

Revenue growth was, in the main, downgraded (just not as hard as analysts had forecasted) and the economic outlook from business could be summarised as 'soggy'. Therefore, the longer-term sustainability of the dividends on the ASX looks strained.

This is a good reminder of two major points when we look at overall investing:

1. Dividends aren't everything, total returns are the name of the game.
2. We want smooth returns over the long term, thus need to diversified across assets.

Globally, what was seen in January trade filtered into February. The US markets continued to recoup its final quarter losses. In fact, since December 24 the S&P 500 has now added over 18%.

As we mentioned in the January there has been a rather large change in the global outlook around interest rates and this has not changed in the 28 days since.

Pressure on the flow of credit and the slowdown in consumption are causing central banks to dive back into their monetary policy forecasts and forcing them to raise the prospect of rate cuts in the coming 12 months.

The RBA is a clear case-in-point, with its new description of Australian economy and the fact that...'Over the past year, the next-move-is-up scenarios were more likely than the next-move-is-down scenarios. Today, the probabilities appear to be more evenly balanced.'

February again reminds us as Portfolio Managers that:

1. Markets are not 'perfect'. The fact that at the end of February's reporting season (which was disappointing) and then to March markets (particularly equities) are rallying on the idea that the RBA could cut rates to stimulate the economy makes us sit up.

This is why all of our Diversified Portfolios are diversified across asset class and geography, even if your risk weighting is toward a higher level of risk. The short-term rally in Australian equities will moderate and thus we need defensive assets in the portfolios to cushion any pull backs and international exposure to capture growth outside of Australia.

2. Your investment timeframe is key to your returns. 2019 has started very positively, the correction in the final quarter of 2018 has almost been erased in capital terms (and that's in just 2 months) and in some cases, on total return basis, erased and well into the black.

But, investing for the most of us is a long-distance journey, we need to remain strong in our convictions and not deviate from our goal of smoothed out, long-term, total returns. And, this point is just as true in positive market times as it is in negative ones. Positive markets can create greed and complacency which can cause investors to diverge from their stated goals by going after 'additional risk'.
