InvestSMART Balanced Portfolio

30 September 2020 update

Quarterly Performance

- The InvestSMART Balanced Portfolio rose slightly in the September quarter, up 1.48% (after fees).
- No changes were made to the portfolio during the quarter.
- Estimated yield on the portfolio is currently 2.42%.
- The Balanced Portfolio outperformed peers in the third quarter of 2020 by 0.21%.

Despite a second lockdown in Victoria, confirmation of the first recession in Australia since 1992 and one of the most humbling earnings seasons for the ASX 200 since the Global Financial Crisis, the third quarter of 2020 was actually pretty benign for the domestic index.

On a capital basis, the ASX 200 was down just 0.44 per cent over the 92 days of the quarter and on a total returns basis it was slightly in the black, adding 0.3 per cent.

However, year-to-date the ASX 200, and most risk markets (equities), are well down on their February highs. That's not to say that they are all underperforming, just take a look at the year-to-date performance of the S&P 500 or Japan's Nikkei 225. But in the main, global equities are lower.

As a balanced investor we understand that part of your investment philosophy and risk tolerance is that you are fine with forgoing some of the upside that can come with growth and high growth investing for the 'piece of mind' that comes with having nearly half of your portfolio in less volatile assets such as fixed income and cash. That's not to say you don't want exposure to equities, it's just not your core focus – your focus is solid, consistent and reliable total returns.

This year has taught us that even during the worst health crisis in a generation, the benefits of diversification hold true.

Here is the year-to-date performance of a consensus Australian-based balanced fund versus the ASX 200 on a total return basis.

This is a perfect illustration of why a balanced weighting provides reliable returns and smoother movements in your portfolio. As the chart shows, a balanced weighting didn't experience anywhere near the fall the local market did, nor has it experienced any additional bouts of volatility like that seen in June or the weakness in September.

The last quarter has also shown once again, that the InvestSMART Balanced Portfolio has outperformed peers, this time by 0.29 per cent. This continues the long-term trend that sees the Balanced Portfolio outperforming peers by 1.51 per cent on a two-year basis and 1.59 per cent on a three-year basis. The long-term effect of this outperformance is perfectly illustrated in this chart.

As we start the final quarter of this unforgettable year, we do need to highlight some very short-term event risks above and beyond the COVID-19 issues. The first is the US Presidential election on November 3. Putting the politics to one side, markets will view the pre- and post-election period as something of an 'unknown' which could see some of the S&P 500's outperformance coming off. However, the long-run view for the US is one of a rebounding economy and a strengthening private sector.

The second is something that has probably been lost in the COVID-19 ether and that is the finalisation of Brexit which is due to be completed by the end of December. This is becoming a possible market event concern because the UK Parliament is trying to alter its agreed deal with the EU. This has led the EU to sue the UK for a breach of a 'good faith' agreement. There is a growing chance the UK crashes out of the EU without a deal.

But these are short-term event risks and as COVID and all other event risks throughout history have taught us, your balanced allocation will smooth out these blips and over the medium term, will continue to provide reliable returns.
